

The National History Club (<http://www.tcr.org/nhc.html>) was formed in March 2002 to encourage the reading, discussion, writing, and enjoyment of history among secondary students and their teachers.

The NHC offers a clearinghouse for information about the activities of its member chapters around the country, sharing ideas and experiences which promote an interest in history, both foreign and domestic, ancient and modern. High schools in twenty-three states now have chapters, and there are over 1,250 students involved. Our organization connects students of diverse backgrounds and varying abilities from schools across the country.

History Clubs which join the NHC may be of several different kinds. Some may already be established, while others may be newly formed. Certain clubs will emphasize local history and site visits. Some will want to put their time into History Day or History Fair projects of various kinds. Others may focus on reading history books together and writing long serious history papers. History Clubs from the same region may even coordinate activities with each other.

We provide members with a newsletter twice a year, sharing information about club activities in member chapters around the country. There is a 25% discount on individual subscriptions to The Concord Review for club members. We ask that high schools applying for a charter send a letter to Robert Nasson, Executive Director, with the names and addresses of all the members and the advisor, requesting to become a chapter of the National History Club.
